Ready for the Future

It is with great excitement that Canyon High School opened its new Career-Plus Action Lab to start the 2016–2017 school year. Our partnership with the District Career Technical Education Department (CTE) has allowed us to enhance our commitment to providing relevant 21st-century learning opportunities for our students.

The Lab consists of eight integrated instructional units, along with manufacturing technology, digital electronics, architectural design, biotechnology, environmental technology, robotics and automation, alternative energy, and communication technology.

Later this year an aviation unit will also be added to enhance our award-winning aviation program.

CHS senior Gabriel Santiago explains the hoverboard he is designing in the Career-Plus Lab.

Through these instructional units, our students are able to build Career Readiness Skills on their way to answering the question, “Is this pathway for me, and where do I go from here?” Throughout this course the students will actively demonstrate academic skills in context, self-direction, initiative, teamwork, collaboration, critical thinking, problem solving, innovation, and communication skills.
